VIRTUES OF INDUSTRY

A while back it was dinned into the people that America must produce more, to which it was replied that we were not marketing all then being produced. Today we are told that we must go to work, and the answer comes that there is no work for hundreds of thousands who would like to have jobs but cannot get them. Not until we do will the country actually have begun that change from war to peace-time conditions that alone will spell general prosperity.

All three forms of the admonition to industrial America mean one thing only. It is that we must produce more per unit of man power—these employed must work more conscientiously, they must be busy at their tasks, not merely present in the job. All labor must be efficient, give a fair day's work for a fair day's pay. The object is to reduce costs of production, to stimulate all business by operating under a reasonable price, to attract buyers through tendering in goods real exchange value for the money demanded for them. Every kind of labor is eventually charged up to consumers in the price of the things they need, whether it be food, clothing, shelter or something else.

If a workman could turn out four articles a day but makes only two, the labor cost of the goods is twice what it should be. High prices contract markets. If the workman produces more, goes to work diligently, gets busy in earnest, reducing the labor cost of his output, the boss will sell it for less and the demand for the goods will increase. This will make work for more people. Additional quantities of the raw materials of which the articles are made will be bought by the manufacturer, there will be more business for transportation companies, and consequently more people will be employed, thus increasing the numbers able to buy all manner of goods.

Cheap goods represent nothing but low labor cost per unit made possible by quantity production. Restricting output defeats the object sought by those who practice it, namely, the making of more jobs. It reduces the numbers employed because the higher prices go the fewer prices come into the markets. Therefore all who have jobs should go to work the more diligently in order that there may be a greater demand for workmen.

FIGHTING FAMINE

The announcement was made a few months ago that millions of Chinese in the remote northern districts would starve unless help was given quickly, large sums were contributed in the United States, and money is still being given. Wealthy Chinese, aroused by the tragedy of famine, have given generously for the relief of their fellow men, and the masses have been interested as never before.

The inadequacy of transportation into the affected districts must be held responsible for the death of large numbers, as supplies which are sent to the seaport cities can not be moved into the interior in time to give aid to all who are in need.

The one bright feature of the whole situation seems to be in the fact that the Chinese government and the people in large numbers have been aroused to the necessity of adopting methods that will do much toward preventing a recurrence of conditions that bring suffering upon so many millions. Crude agricultural methods and a lack of transportation facilities have rendered large numbers of Chinese helpless when crops fail.

America is sending money and supplies to aid suffering Chinese, just as it has done in other years. The best help that the United States could give to China now that the nation seems to be awakening to her own economic needs, is to encourage the Chinese to adopt modern agricultural methods and to build roads to connect the remote districts with the trade centers of the nation. China will not be helped by charity unless it stimulates the people to utilize ways of helping themselves.

THE NEW DAY IN MEXICO

The present administration in Mexico shows a disposition to bring about a condition which has not obtained in that country for many years. Not only are the officials trying to enforce law to an extent that will give protection to foreign interests, but they show an intention to rid the country of undesirable aliens. One American draft evader has already been turned over to the United States army officials.

Mexico might render a good service to herself and promote the friendship of the United States by bringing all draft evaders hiding in the country south of the Rio Grande to the border. Mexican authorities have given indications that they have no patience with bolshevism, and they have recently taken action that should tend to discourage efforts to spread the communistic doctrines in Mexico. Mexico has problems of race and education that should not be complicated by the teacher of radicalism.

The interests of Mexico, and of foreign nations in that country, depend on the success of the Mexican authorities in restraining the lawless elements of the country. Draft evaders who fled from the United States into Mexico during the war will hardly make good citizens for Mexico or any other country. It would be unfortunate if Mexicans should get the idea that these slackers stand for anything that is American.

RHINE BASEBALL SEASON NOW ON

(By Associated Press)

COBLENZ, Germany, May 9.—The baseball season on the Rhine has opened and is now in full swing. for the national game follows the American flag. Uncle Sam's army here has a "big league" of its own and, with the coming of spring, baseball has taken precedence over all other forms of sport.

Coblentz has three teams entered in the league, while nine from Andernach, Neuwied, Engers, Mayen and Sayn make up the eight teams. Two games are played each week by all teams and, while it is too early in the season to predict whether any Ty Cobbs or Babe Ruths will be developed, the brand of baseball which is being dished out here would compare favorably with high class amateur or semi-professional teams which play Saturday games in medium-sized cities in the United States.
